

KAREN HORNE

Our living patterns are all affected by the change of seasons, whether our locations are rural or urban. In my work, I've been fascinated with the theme of dining, and how we so enjoy al fresco dining in summer, and move back to dine in more intimate indoor spaces in the fall and winter. My dining series speaks to that shift - from sun-drenched courtyards and patios, to more intimate, indoor spaces.

“Covent Garden Diners” celebrates the height of summer with its glancing sunlight and heat. “Fresh Linens” is set outdoors as well, showing the shift to the comfortable temps of Indian Summer, and the turning of leaves.

“Lingering” contrasts brilliantly lit umbrellas with the cool of shadows. “Deux Mademoiselles” shows a rainy early autumn cityscape, with young women carrying an umbrella, passing an indoor/outdoor restaurant. The diners seem oblivious to the rain. “The Glow at the Cafe Flore” gives us a peek into the intimate spaces of the famed restaurant at night, when everything takes on an amber tone.
